

Katherine Dean is a visual artist based out of Indiana in the United States. Her work exist at the merger of traditional and contemporary photography. By exploring modern ideas and imagery with historic and/or manipulated traditional processes, Dean addresses the ideas of time, memory, and space.

Dean is a Continuing Lecturer of Photography at Purdue University. She earned a MFA (2017) in photography from Memphis College of Art and also holds a BFA (2014) in photography from the University of North Florida. An abrupt transition from one landscape to the other has greatly influenced the manner in which Dean approaches the creative process. Additionally, Dean has spent the last six years working with a small group of artists at Young Blood Studio in Memphis, TN, creating large scale public sculptures. Her work has been exhibited extensively nationally and internationally.

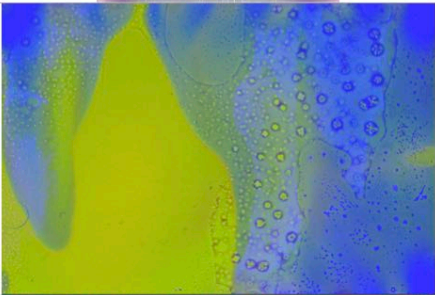

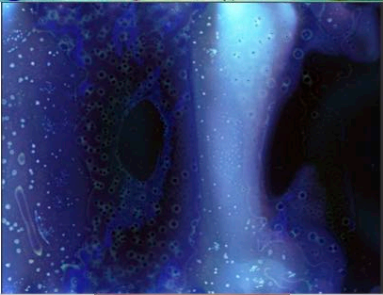

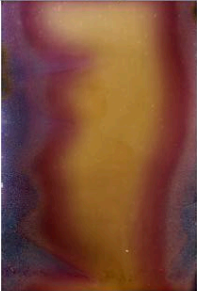

Currently Dean lives in Lafayette, IN, USA, where she is working on a new body of work exploring the dissolution of memory and time.

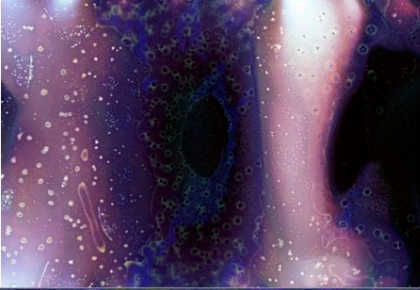

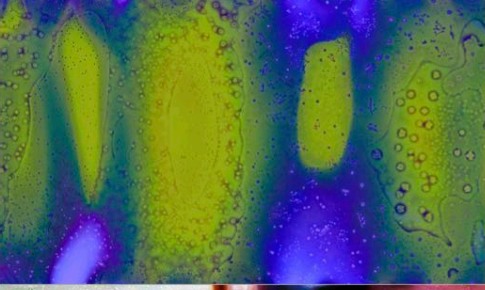

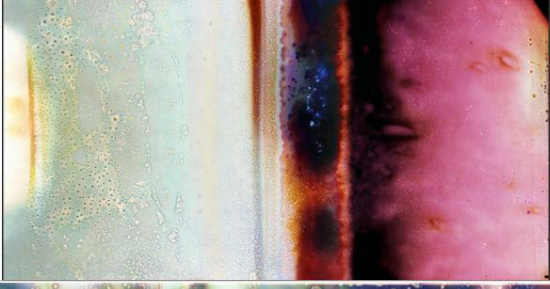

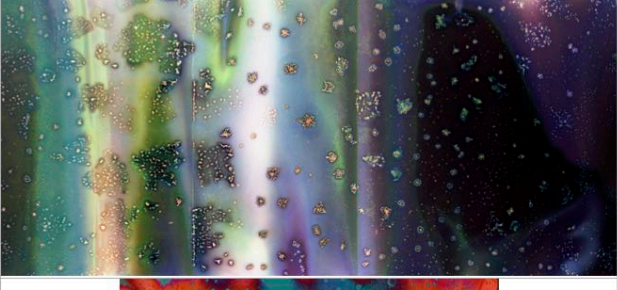

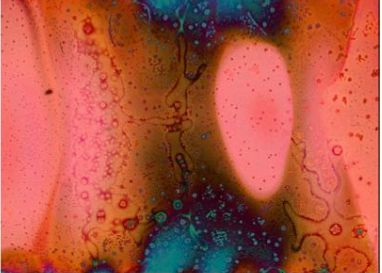

Pabst Blue Ribbon is a series of photographs that uses the American beer as a chemical agent in the developing process. With this project I submerged an unexposed roll of 35mm film to PBR beer and let it ferment for about a month. Once I was ready to shoot I documented various landscapes in the South and then proceeded to process the film as normal. This method of working allowed for a spontaneous chemical process to co-create these ethereal images with surprising effects.
